KAISER PERMANENTE: SPECIALTY CARE YOU CAN TRUST.

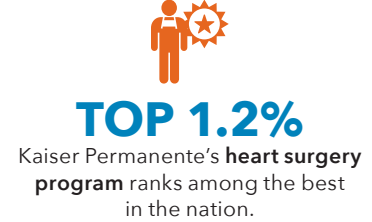

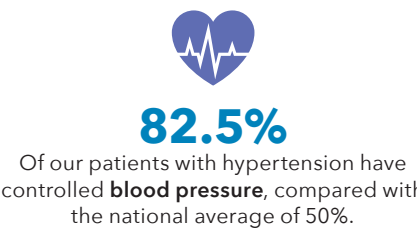

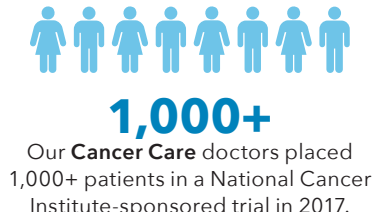

A Kaiser Permanente member emailed her husband's doctor in the Kaiser Permanente Primary Care Department asking to have him placed back on medication for heartburn. The member explained that her husband's symptoms flared up every time they went grocery shopping.

The Primary Care doctor called the husband for a phone consultation to get more information. The member said the symptoms arose whenever he pushed the shopping cart, and grew worse the heavier the cart became. The Primary Care physician determined that the member probably had angina (a condition in which the heart doesn't receive enough blood), and told him that he needed emergency care.

The member went to the Kaiser Permanente Emergency Care Department at Saint Joseph Hospital, where a care team conducted an electrocardiogram on him. But the results were normal. Rather than let him return home, though, the Emergency Care team had him do a treadmill test, which he failed.

The Emergency Care team then referred him immediately to the Kaiser Permanente Heart and Vascular Care Department, also at Saint Joseph Hospital. Later that same day, a Kaiser Permanente cardiac surgeon installed a stent in the member's left, main coronary artery, helping to prevent a potentially massive and fatal heart attack.
